BC's best are recognized in the 2023 BC Tourism and Hospitality Awards

By Jennifer Blyth, westcoasttraveller.ca

The best of the best in British Columbia tourism were recognized last month during the 2023 BC Tourism and Hospitality Awards. Part of the 2023 BC Tourism and Hospitality Conference Awards Gala, hosted by the BC Hotel Association (BHCA) and the Tourism Industry Association of BC, the winners were selected from 27 finalists.

"The winners and finalists of the 2023 BC Tourism and Hospitality Awards are a testament to the rich talent and hard work of those in the hospitality and tourism sector across our fair province," said Ingrid Jarrett, BCHA president and CEO.

Presented by Indigenous Tourism BC, the gala recognized nine award winners for their excellence, leadership and innovation within British Columbia's tourism and hospitality sector.

"These distinguished winners have demonstrated an unwavering commitment to excellence in their respective professions and have provided an exceptional experience to all visitors to our province," said Walt Judas, CEO of the TIABC.

The winners and finalists of the 2023 BC Tourism and Hospitality Awards include:

ACCESS & INCLUSION AWARD sponsored by Destination British Columbia: Sport Surrey, City of Surrey. Finalists were The BC Bird Trail and the Vernon Adaptive Program.

BUSINESSWOMAN OF THE YEAR sponsored by Prince of Whales: Kate Cox, Barkerville Heritage Trust. Finalists were Lan Do, Banh Mi Tres Bon and Sarah Vallely, OPUS Hotel Vancouver.

COMMUNITY CONTRIBUTION & IMPACT AWARD sponsored by Tourism Richmond: Tigh-Na-Mara Seaside Spa Resort and Conference Centre. Finalists were Destination Campbell River and John Rae, Resort Municipality of Whistler and Karen Goodwin, Tourism Whistler.

EMPLOYEES FIRST AWARD sponsored by go2HR: Sun Peaks Resort, near Kamloops. Finalists were Gooseneck Hospitality and The Oswego Hotel.

REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE AWARD sponsored by British Columbia Destination Marketing Organization Association: Northern FanCon. Finalists were Barkerville Historic Town and Park and Rambo First Blood, Tourism Hope, Cascades & Canyons.

INDIGENOUS OPERATOR OR EXPERIENCE AWARD sponsored by Indigenous Tourism Canada and Indigenous Tourism BC: Klahoose Wilderness Resort in Desolation Sound. Finalists were Homalco Wildlife and Cultural Tours and Nemiah Valley Lodge.

INNOVATION AWARD sponsored by Acera Insurance and CapriCMW: Beyond the Haunting Investigations. Finalists were Driftwood Outdoor Guide & Business Apprenticeship and Misty Isles Economic Development Society.

PROFESSIONAL EXCELLENCE (DMO) AWARD sponsored by Tourism Whistler: Destination Greater Victoria. Finalists were Tourism Chilliwack and Tourism Prince George.

SUSTAINABILITY AWARD sponsored by Nanaimo Airport: The Parkside Hotel & Spa. Finalists were Monte Creek Winery and Spirit of the West Adventures.

New festival covers all the flavour bases

Inspired by unique pairings between chefs and mixologists, a new festival called Bacon, Beer and Bourbon will celebrate the best of seasonal beer, bourbon cocktails, and the smells and tastes of pork-forward creations by local chefs.

"Dream of the smell of bacon wafting across your nose while you sip on a batch bourbon cocktail laughing with a friend. We want to create the ultimate backyard party that mimics elements of a fair but focuses on being strictly adult," says festival founder David Bain.

The festival, set to take place June 24 at Starlight Plaza in Langford (near Victoria), focuses on bold rich flavours that elevate the barbeque season. Tickets went on sale February 23 and can be accessed here: bit.ly/BBBLangford

An adult-specific festival, guests will receive a welcome cocktail or beer upon arrival, and a complimentary piece of Hertel Meats' bacon. They will then be invited to wander through the grounds, exploring the wares of festival vendors, enjoying buskers and indulging in the rich flavours created by participating chefs and beverage vendors.

Festival-goers will also have the chance to show off their competitive sides in the oversized lawn games, and vote for their favourite creations from the array of chefs and mixologists.

BC Ferries launches app for better trip management

Those wanting to explore British Columbia's coasts can now plan and track their travels from their phone. BC Ferries has launched an app that will allow passengers to make bookings, manage trips, check in at the terminal and find other travel information.

"The app is about giving customers the tools needed to enhance their trip-planning experience through their mobile device," says Janet Carson, BC Ferries' vice president of marketing and customer experience.

The app includes a travel preferences section, allowing customers to check schedules and current conditions on their favourite routes, while an "express book" feature will make securing a spot on saved sailings quick and efficient, according to a news release.

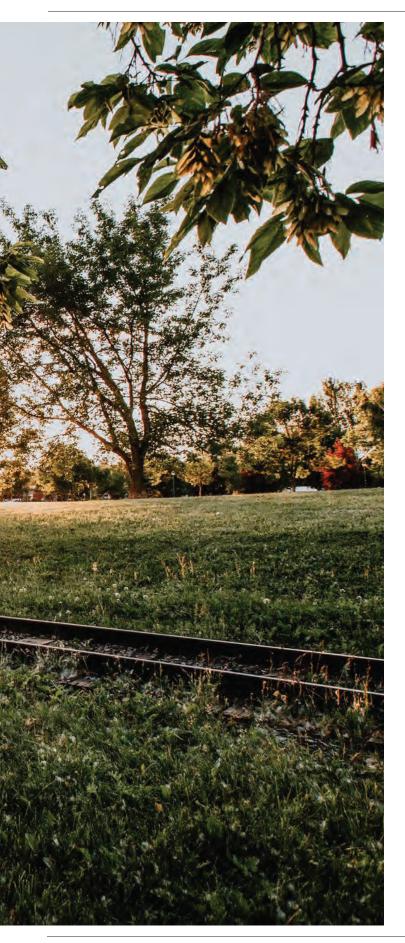

The current conditions section shows sailing statuses and estimated deck space on selected routes. Passengers can also set up alerts to get notifications on service notices and coming sailing reminders.

A seamless check-in feature lets passengers find their upcoming trips on the app dashboard and access their booking barcode for scanning. Users can also log in with new or existing BC Ferries accounts.

The BC Ferries app is available on the Apple App Store or Google Play Store and more information can be found at bcferries.com/app

A whirlwind visit to beautiful Prince George

BY • HANS TAMMEMAGI

Wanting to cram as much as possible into my two-day visit to Prince George, I meet Rhea Stark, the city's tourism coordinator, at Lheidli T'enneh Memorial Park, which was renamed from Fort George Park in 2015 in honour of the local First Nations. The park sits on the west shore of the Fraser River, about two kilometres south of where it joins the Nechako River.

I am immediately drawn to the Fort George Railway, a passenger train pulled around a 2.2-kilometre circuit by the Little Prince mini-steam wood-burning engine, built in 1912. The sound of kids oohing and ahhing mingles with the chug-chug-chug of the Little Prince, which was present at the driving of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway's last spike.

"This is my favourite spot in Prince George," says Rhea. "With a population of 74,000, PG—as the locals call it—is big enough to offer virtually everything, yet small enough to still be friendly and personal. I love the spirit of community and pride. There is a wonderful feeling of being welcome here."

Next, we enter The Exploration Place, a modern museum brimming with hands-on science exhibits. I head for the Hodul'eh-a: A Place of Learning Gallery, designed in conjunction with the Lheidli T'enneh First Nation, on whose unceded territory the city is situated. I pore over old photos, blankets, pipes and other cultural artifacts, impressed by the area's 9,000 years of history.

A short drive takes us to Cottonwood Island Nature Park. Crossing a wooden bridge, we follow a path into the forest, and start a scavenger hunt for faces, fairy houses and a dragon—in the form of 20 carvings on trees by local artist Elmer Gunderson. Rhea says the area is also good for wildlife spotting, which might include beavers. A few months ago she saw a bear in a tree.

Soon I am enjoying a 360-degree panoramic view of the city and the Fraser River from atop Connaught Hill. Located in downtown Prince George, Connaught Hill Park is easily accessible and beautifully landscaped. While enjoying the grand views, I learn the park is named for Canada's 10th governor general, Prince Arthur, the Duke of Connaught and Strathearn.

I am sad, however, that we won't have time to visit all of Prince George's numerous parks, including the David Douglas Botanical Garden next to the University of Northern British Columbia. Nor will I get to try the mountain bike trails at the Pidherny Recreation Site, at the northwest edge of the city. I've heard the rides are awesome.

That evening at CrossRoads Brewing & Distillery, I join Joe Wiebe (the author of Craft Beer Revolution: The Insider's Guide to BC Breweries) and a group of beer aficionados, who are touring The Northern BC Ale Trail. Not only do we visit the shining brewing vats and taste all the beers—I love the caramel malt taste of the George St Brown Ale—but we eat great pizza from a large wood-fired brick oven. While chatting, I learn Prince George is an anchor of The BC Ale Trail, offering two other craft breweries: Deadfall Brewing Company and Trench Brewing & Distilling. Apparently, Wiebe's group is en route to taste their products also. I wish them well.

In addition to breweries, Rhea explains, PG has Canada's most northerly winery: Northern Lights, an elegant riverside establishment that specializes in fruit wines. Rhea says she enjoys all-season activities there, including outdoor performances, yoga, lights in the winter and more.

That night I sleep very well. The next day, the whirlwind continues. Stopping at the Central BC Railway and Forestry Museum, I am astonished at its size and the staggering number of exhibits. We walk among an enormous number of old trains, visit the Penny railway station and even ride on a miniature train.

Then we drive east to the Chun T'oh Whudujut or Ancient Forest Provincial Park and hike into the only old-growth rainforest in the interior of BC. Enormous red cedars tower over us, some up to 2,000 years in age. We follow a boardwalk through a diverse ecosystem that includes mosses, lichens, beech fern and wild ginger. Earlier on the drive, we saw a moose and two bears. We gaze in awe at the ancient Treebeard and Big Tree, two red cedars that reach far into the sky.

Driving back, I regret that we do not have time to visit and walk the trails that wind through wildlife-rich Eskers Provincial Park and Fort George Canyon Provincial Park, with its dramatic whirlpools.

That afternoon, my thoughts turn from nature to culture as I head for Two Rivers Gallery, a centre for contemporary Canadian art and creativity. I wander through the displays, particularly moved by the brilliant blues and purples of the northern lights silhouetting a dog sled in a painting by Erin Stagg. The gallery presents not only art but also lectures and workshops. However, what I love best is that it's free to get in!

That evening I seek classy cuisine. I sip a Cabernet Sauvignon at Betulla Burning, a Neapolitan restaurant, and order its wagyu steak frites. After all, wagyu beef is one of the most sought-after meats in the world. Delicious, I think, and very juicy, with sweetness and some serious umami flavour. The server notes there are many top restaurants in town. She also recommends attending a performance of the Prince George Symphony Orchestra. If only I had more time, I muse.

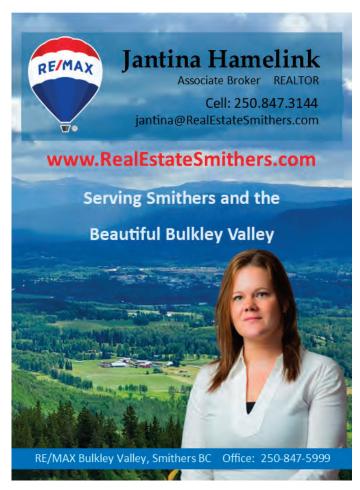

Flying home the next day, I recall Prince George's slogan: "We own the winter." OK, I think, but over the past two days I've learned PG owns the other seasons too.

SOMETHING'S BREWING

in Kelowna

Fast-growing industry highlights beer, creative themes and top-notch cuisine

BY • SHEREEN ABBAS

Ten years ago, wineries dominated the alcohol and activities sector in Kelowna. But today, they share a space with the city's fast-growing craft brewery industry.

Craft beer has become popular with both locals and tourists, as customers flock downtown and to Kelowna's north end, which now boasts over 10 breweries within walking distance of each other.

The unique landscape of a brewery district that's located just steps away from Okanagan Lake, with its mountainous backdrop, augments the experience, and visiting has become a popular activity—whether it's to sample flights or stay for dinner.

High-calibre chefs are taking residency at breweries, where they can let their creative flair shine and have a selection of unique beer to pair it with. Kettle River Brewing Co. is one example, with notable chef Brock Bowes taking the helm of Provisions Kitchen and offering items like the enormous Weekend Big-Board—dinner for two that changes weekly.

Just a few doors down, it's all about dogs at Unleashed Brewing. As the first brewery in Kelowna to obtain a permit allowing dogs indoors, flights arrive in dog bowls with canine-inspired names.

Right beside it, the Welton Arms Craft Beer and Restaurant emulates a British pub. Its owner, a British immigrant, opened the location to bring flavours of ale and lager from his home country to Canada.

Railway Brewing, the newest addition to the area, embraces the active Okanagan lifestyle, so customers who use the Okanagan Rail Trail can walk, run or cycle up to the patio.

Sustainability also comes into play as Kelowna Beer Institute uses spent grain to bake fresh pizza, while many other breweries such as Jackknife and Rustic Reel donate their spent grains to local farms as feed.

As the industry grows, the beer community has banded together to support each other, forming the Central Okanagan Brewery Association (COBRA) earlier this year. More than 20 craft breweries are part of the association, which spearheaded the region's first Kelowna Beer Week, stretching from Lake Country to West Kelowna, in winter 2022.

With endless year-round patios, entertainment and, of course, delicious local craft beer on the menu, breweries have solidified their presence as a worthy reason to visit Kelowna.

Market DAY

Hop on the BC Farmers'
Market Trail for fresh, local and sustainable

BY • KRYSTAL WIGGINS

Summer is almost here, and the farmers' market season in BC looks to be more impactful than ever. Locals and travellers can find buzzworthy up-and-coming food businesses, farm-fresh food and artisan goods across every region of the province through the BC Farmers' Market Trail.

This free, comprehensive, mobile-friendly website provides access to more than 145 authentic farmers' markets across 10 regions, from Northern BC to the Kootenay Rockies, Vancouver Island, the Gulf Islands and beyond.

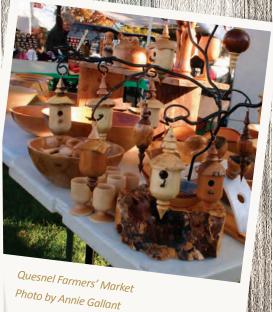

"BC farmers' markets have always been known for supporting local food and food lands, but people may not realize that farmers' markets are where thousands of BC's most beloved businesses get their start, including local favourites like The Juice Truck and Spread'em Kitchen," says Heather O'Hara, executive director of the BC Association of Farmers' Markets.

Each year, farmers' markets across the province contribute more than $150 million in economic benefits to the provincial economy. By supporting vendors at farmers' markets this summer, British Columbians will be directly supporting local businesses, while also contributing to the preservation and sustainability of BC's food lands for future generations.

"In the wake of ongoing supply-chain issues faced by many in our province, people have become more committed to shopping for food and dining out in ways that reflect their values," explains Wylie Bystedt, board chair of the BC Association of Farmers' Markets. "Each and every one of us plays an important role in preserving our local food systems and supporting our communities through the thoughtful, sustainable food choices we make. The BC Farmers' Market Trail tool makes it easy and fun for people to shop and dine with their values top of mind—while supporting local businesses, too!"

The farmers' market summer season begins in mid-May and runs until early September, with specific opening dates and times varying by location and region.

The unprecedented events of the last three years have amplified the importance of supporting local businesses and the role everyone plays in preserving our local food systems and food preservation traditions.

The BC Farmers' Market Trail gives British Columbians and travellers alike a user-friendly website to find markets by name, region, community, season or other key features—such as dog-friendly or wheelchair-accessible—making it an essential resource to use all season long.

To use the trail, visit bcfarmersmarkettrail.com. From here, filter by region and season to find the best local food and businesses that BC has to offer.

Visitors to this year's markets can expect a diverse variety of food, artisan goods, and delicious eat-at-the-market options.

SOME OF THE MANY NEWSWORTHY VENDORS INCLUDE:

NINA'S PIEROGI: Offering handmade pierogies in gluten-free or organic unbleached dough in the Vancouver region.

Take a HIKE!

Great trekking spots around the Lower Mainland

BY • AMY ATTAS (westcoasttraveller.ca)

BC's Lower Mainland is a hiker's paradise. With hundreds of trails within an hour or two of downtown Vancouver, you're bound to find a new favourite spot to take in the view, soak up the surroundings and probably break a sweat.

There are lots of great Lower Mainland hikes for trekkers of all ages and abilities, but these are five of our favourites. Happy exploring!

DIEZ VISTAS

Where: North of Port Moody.

What: Diez Vistas means "10 viewpoints," giving you great views up Indian Arm and down to Burnaby, Deep Cove and Vancouver on a clear day.

Know before you go: Expect to climb for over an hour before reaching the first viewpoint; the other nine are easier to reach along the ridge.

GARIBALDI LAKE ►

Where: Sea-to-Sky, between Squamish and Whistler.

What: Forested climb to a surreal turquoise lake.

Know before you go: It's possible to climb up to the lake and back to your car in a day, but a multi-day trip gives you more time to explore. Garibaldi Lake is equipped with cooking shelters, sinks and picnic tables, making it a great base camp for trips to Black Tusk or Panorama Ridge.

▼PITT LAKE WILDLIFE LOOP

Where: Pitt Lake, north of Maple Ridge.

What: Flat trails and excellent wildlife viewing.

Know before you go: As you walk the narrow dikes between waterways, keep your eyes peeled for great blue herons, eagles and other birds, plus beavers, deer and maybe even bears. The trails are great for all ages and abilities, and you can climb the wooden viewing platform for a new perspective.

CHIPMUNK CREEK ►

(Cheam Peak + Lady Peak)

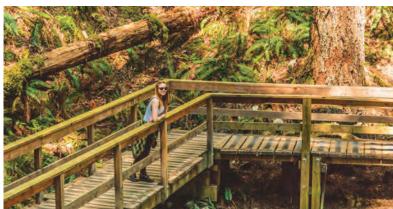

Where: Southeast of Chilliwack.

What: Spectacular views of the Fraser Valley.

Know before you go: The drive to the trailhead is more difficult than the hike—do not attempt to drive on the decommissioned logging road without a 4×4 vehicle with high clearance. It's cold and windy at the summit, even in summer, but the 360-degree views are spectacular!

◆ BADEN POWELL TRAIL

Where: Vancouver's North Shore, from Horseshoe Bay to Deep Cove.

What: A forested 48-kilometre trail, with many access points for shorter hikes.

Know before you go: Named for the founder of the Boy Scouts, this trail includes many points of interest for popular day hikes; try the Lynn Canyon suspension bridge, the Quarry Rock lookout or the views of Vancouver from Eagle Bluff.

Where does the name of Campbell River come from?

The river was named for Dr. Samuel Campbell, the surgeon on board the HMS Plumper, a survey ship that visited the area around 1859 under the command of Captain George Henry Richards. Prior to Captain Richards' survey, Europeans did not have much of a presence in this area. It was only after European interests shifted to logging in the 1860s that they came to this area in greater numbers.
